Something was wrong.
“My mother, Ruth, has been living in a nursing home with Alzheimer’s for five years and I see her twice a week. It’s just devastating.

I realized that something was wrong when she was in assisted living. She started experiencing sundowning, and her personality changed. As a friend once told me, “Meet your new mother.” And now I just try to offer unconditional love and understanding. The changes she’s gone through are staggering.

She wasn’t sleeping, she was trying to leave the building, she started calling the police, and became aggressive with the nursing home staff. I had to visit morning, noon, and night because of her behavior.

But it also became clear that she needed touch – she needed someone to hold and kiss. The first time I touched her, she screamed. But then she grabbed my hand and kissed me. And it’s kind of odd, because growing up, she was not that affectionate. I guess you have to find the humor in these situations wherever you can find it!”

Ellen looked for help...
“Still, I was very confused. I had no idea what to do. I was doing a lot of research, but it wasn’t helping – I couldn’t get enough information. I started visiting different organizations for support, but every place felt sterile and it didn’t feel like anyone really cared.”

And – thanks to you – she found help.
“Then I discovered CaringKind. I remember signing up to attend CaringKind’s annual meeting presenting the latest research on Alzheimer’s. When I arrived, the line went around the building, and I burst into tears! All these people were there for the same reason! I stopped feeling so incredibly alone. I felt tremendous relief.

And now I believe that everything is manageable.
Having the right support makes all the difference. I read everything I can, and I go to every CaringKind event there is. And if sharing my story helps someone else, then I’m glad.”
Because of your support, we’re able to study a new tactic to improve health outcomes for caregivers and care recipients.

MapHabit™ is a visual mapping system built to promote independence and improve quality of life for individuals living with Alzheimer’s Disease and related dementias, their caregivers, and family members. The mobile software provides behavior prompts with customizable picture and keyword visual maps to assist memory-impaired people with accomplishing activities of daily living. The tool provides benefits such as increasing quality of care, improving caregiving staff satisfaction and retention, and offering a hybrid-care model to improve the bottom line while also providing a key competitive advantage.

“CaringKind is the ideal partner for testing the efficacy of our visual mapping project,” said MapHabit CEO, Matt Golden. “Their community of caregivers is so large and engaged, we’ve been able to recruit study participants in a fraction of the time it normally takes.”

“Our partnership with MapHabit may reveal a new, evidence-based strategy for making life easier for care partners and improving the quality of life for the person in their care,” says Eleonora Tornatore-Mikesh. “That’s a win-win for everyone, and it’s why I’m so excited about our partnership with MapHabit.”

Thirty participants will be enrolled in the study, which will take about three months to complete. Stay tuned for results later this summer.

The CaringKind Alzheimer’s Walk will be Moving to Central Park

Dr. Alisa Kauffman is our official Chair for 2021.

Walk season has begun! To acknowledge the outsized impact that Alzheimer’s has on women, we launched Walk on Mother’s Day with a video to help everyone get warmed up for walking! To see the video, please go online to: caringkindnyc.org/walk.

We’re thrilled to announce that the Manhattan Walk on October 10 will take place at the Naumburg Bandshell in Central Park! The Brooklyn Walk on September 26 will take place at its usual location on the Coney Island Boardwalk.

We’re also happy to announce that Dr. Alisa Kauffman is serving as the Chair of the 2021 Walk! Dr. Kauffman is a dentist who specializes in serving patients with Alzheimer’s and dementia. Her practice is called Geriatric House Call Dentistry. Welcome, Dr. Kauffman!

The pandemic has forced us to look at our work through a new lens, and we now see a need for not only virtual flexibility, but also innovation. As such, we are excited to announce additional programs, services, and projects that will help more families and people with dementia in New York City and beyond. Take a look at the articles in this newsletter as good examples of our new efforts!

While Alzheimer’s and dementia care can be challenging and exhausting, there is hope that there will soon be effective treatments. Until then, expert caregiving is the best medicine. Check back with us over the summer as we announce a menu of new, evidence-based interventions designed to improve the quality of life for people with dementia and caregivers!

Our innovation is only possible with your support. Please help us continue to innovate by walking with us in Central Park on October 10th! Thank you!

MAP: Memory Advocate Peers

With your help we're incubating a new project to connect new caregivers with experienced caregivers.

It’s called “Memory Advocate Peers” or MAP. Co-founded by Jim and Geri Taylor and Sarah Walter, the project is a peer-to-peer effort to bring guidance to individuals newly diagnosed with dementia and their care partners.

MAP will help them find online and local resources, provide supplemental information about their disease, give assistance in finding a clinical trial, and provide a trusted friend with whom to speak about their challenges with this new development in their lives.

MAP will recruit and train up to 25 advocates and provide support to 50 clients and care partners and include individuals from culturally diverse communities from the very beginning. A research study is embedded within the program to evaluate feasibility, as well as participant quality of life, health resource use, and impact on psychological wellbeing.

Because of your financial support, CaringKind is able to serve as fiscal sponsor for this exciting pilot project!
